The newbies

The new players that are changing the City’s social scene.

Smoking Goat Shoreditch (Just Opened)

The Thai barbecue bar from Ben Chapman and Brian Hannon (behind Soho’s Kiln) and Head Chef Ali Borer recently opened in Shoreditch. Inspired by Bangkok’s late night canteen spots, the menu centres on Drinking Foods and larger, comforting dishes as well as a new breakfast menu.

NUALA (Just Opened)

Recently opened by Niall Davidson (Chiltern Firehouse), NUALA is an all-day restaurant and Irish bar in the heart of East London. With a sweeping concrete bar, and sleek relaxed seating, the restaurant is centred around the brick-lined open fireplace. With dishes like steak tartare with Guinness sauce, squid and bacon broth, and veal sweetbreads with cauliflower rarebit, NUALA promises to mark a new stage in the evolution of all day British and Irish bistronomy.

Three Cranes (Just opened)

From chef-restaurateur Henry Harris (Racine), Three Cranes offers old-fashioned British cooking (a Grill Room has existed at the pub since 1911) with a detour through the bistros and bouchons of France. The menu will include some of Henry’s signature dishes such as steak tartare and confit duck with lentils, according to seasonal produce. The wine list has been carefully chosen, balancing familiar names with some new and interesting producers.

FEATURE

A Georgian landmark reborn

Designed by one of the most influential and talented architects of the 18th century, George Dance the Younger, a new luxury hotel set in a restored Georgian terrace will open in the City of London in 2020.

Forming part of the One Crown Place development, Bespoke Hotels has been appointed to operate 41 bedrooms at the property in Sun Street. With ambitions to join a select group of five-star hotels in the City, the hotel will combine a 100-cover destination restaurant and bar alongside a private members' club.

Design is being directed by Bowler James Brindley, a renowned interiors business behind some of London's most luxurious residential developments, together with high end global hotels and restaurants including Asia De Cuba in Abu Dhabi. A rich colour palette reminiscent of the Georgian period dominates the interiors. Guestrooms and cossetting suites in the eaves will be opulent but cosy, with ornate detailing and a hierarchy of patterned wallpapers complementing natural woods. In the rear, a covered courtyard (pictured above), reminiscent of an orangery, will house diners from the hotel's restaurant.

Each of the six townhouses has a unique personality and the ground floor communal areas are interlinked by a series of rooms, including a public-facing deli, social café, art gallery in the lobby with a reception parlour for a relaxed check-in, a club lounge with a bar and an adjoining library room.

"We are delighted to have been appointed to oversee the operation of the hotel at One Crown Place", commented Haydn Fentum, CEO of Bespoke Hotels. "The development will be a stunning landmark for London, further galvanising an area that has developed remarkably in recent years, with the hotel a key ingredient within this".

Ian Bayliss, co-founder of Bowler James Brindley, said: "The hotel itself is located within six original Georgian townhouses which have been much loved by local residents and workers for many years the buildings have become a landmark for the area, so it has been a pleasure to be involved in restoring and bringing them back to their former glory, so they can be enjoyed to their full once again".

HISTORY

George Dance the Younger

Written by Paula Cooze award winning Blue Badge guide.

George Dance the younger was born in 1741 in Chiswell Street, a stone's throw from One Crown Place. Dance spent four years abroad on the Grand Tour, a journey wealthy young Englishmen would take through France and Italy in search of art, culture and the roots of Western civilization. At the age of just 17, Dance set out by sea to begin his adventure. In Rome he mingled with architects and aged 19 received his first commission: a design for two marble chimney pieces.

At the age of 22, he entered the competition for 'A public Gallery for statues, pictures, etc.', organised by the Academia at Parma, winning the gold medal. By the end of his time in Italy, Dance's architectural style was established in the neo-classical form, characterised by unifying porticos or railings for terraced houses, sash windows and fine decorative motives.

In 1762 Dance returned to England with sketch books crammed with pictures. Whilst he was a primarily a neo-classicist, his versatility meant he was also adept in other styles. A mere 13 minutes' walk from One Crown Place is an example of his interpretation of the Gothic style, the porch of the Guildhall in the City of London.

In 1767 Dance the younger introduced crescents – semi-circular rows of houses – and circuses – buildings encircling a central communal area – to London. Revolutionary at the time, but now common-place throughout London, Oxford Circus being an example. An Act of Parliament of 1760 allowed the removal of the old City gates in the east of the City, opening up the lands around Moorgate to wholesale planned development for the first time. In 1773 the City planning committee approved Dance's designs and the development of the area got underway.

Dance also conceived the idea of the 'oval amphitheatre', which materialised as Finsbury Square. This was to have houses with matching façades of stock brick and balconettes of delicate ironwork at the first-floor windows. By the 1790s almost every street was fringed with houses, with shops at ground floor level, as was the case in Sun Street.

George Dance the younger died peacefully in 1825 aged 83. The question is why this remarkable architect is not as widely known as his contemporaries Robert Adam and William Chambers. Part of the answer is that the mundane aspect of his job Clerk to the City Works took up much of his time. At the same time, many of his buildings have since been demolished. And that is why the conservation of the terraces in Sun Street (originally Crown Street), now part of the One Crown Place development is so important, as they are examples of Dance's designs in the area.

FINE DINING

Michelin starred restaurants

Needing no introduction, a restaurant’s ‘star’ speaks more for its quality than words ever could. London is one of the top-ranked cities in the world for fine dining, and with seven Michelin starred restaurants within a 20 minute walk from One Crown Place it’s little wonder why.

Angler South Place

Perched at the top of South Place Hotel, Angler is a Michelin-starred restaurant showcasing sustainable seafood from British waters. Executive Chef, Gary Foulkes was previously head chef at The Square, the two Michelin-starred Anglo-French restaurant in Mayfair, prior to taking the helm of Angler in April 2016.

SHOPPING

The Royal Exchange

The Royal Exchange is a luxury shopping destination in the heart of the City, with dining options for every occasion.

Located in the heart of the City, The Royal Exchange is one of London's most iconic buildings and boasts over 30 contemporary retailers and offers an unrivalled collection of boutique shopping and dining. The Royal Exchange hosts events throughout the year including the annual Watch and Jewellery Week and Christmas Tree Lighting Ceremony. Watch and Jewellery Week is a week-long celebration of the finest watches and jewellery the City has to offer where guests mingle with some of the City's finest watch and jewellery experts. The annual Christmas Tree Lighting Ceremony welcomes residents and visitors to the City of London to a seasonal evening of hot chocolate, mulled wine and warm mince pies as well as traditional carol singing.

Officially opened by HRH Queen Elizabeth I in 1571, The Royal Exchange was the brainchild of renowned merchant Thomas Gresham. It soon became a centre for the capital's commerce, bringing together both brokers and merchants. Trading continued for the next four centuries, despite being interrupted by fires, war and construction work, before coming to a halt in 1991. Then in 2001, an extensive redevelopment by architects Aukett Fitzroy Robinson transformed The Royal Exchange courtyard, reviving its trading legacy by giving it a new role housing the world's most desired retailers and placing it, once again, in the thriving centre of commerce.
